« The Kangaroo rat »

The Kangaroo rat lives in a desert area of the southern United States. It gets its name from its jumping ability. Proportionately, it has the same long powerful legs as the kangaroo. It also has a strong tail on which to sit.

Only three inches (7,62cm) in length, the kangaroo rat can jump with amazing accuracy and land directly on top of an insect, its principal food.

When the kangaroo rats fight, they do so in midair. Two fighters reap into the air and hit each other with their sharp claws while still in the air.

Probably the most interesting thing about the kangaroo rat is that it never drinks water, it gets moisture from desert plants. These provide it with all the liquid that it needs.
