People are divided into two categories : those who prefer living in the city and those who like small villages. Those belonging to the first category maintain that life in the city is easier and more enjoyable than that in small villages. There are more shops, stores, cafés, restaurants, youth-clubs, cinemas.

Rachid, who left his village three years ago to study in a big town, is one of those who think that the city is too noisy, the air is polluted, life is too fast and people are less friendly than those of his native village. In addition, life in the city is very costly. You need a lot of money because everything is so expensive. Unlike the city, life in small villages is quite cheap, and people seem to belong to one single family.

When asked about his future plans, Rachid said that he started feeling homesick and that he would like to go back to his village at the end of his studies. But, as it is hard to get a job there, he will certainly have to think a lot before taking any decision.
